

The Three-Line Note

A week of noticing. No fixing required.

Hi, it's Carrie. This is the smallest practice I know, and it is the beginning of everything. You cannot change a pattern you cannot see, so this week we are not changing anything. We are only watching, with curiosity instead of judgment. You are gathering evidence, and you are meeting the part of you who can watch the wave instead of drowning in it. I have a real soft spot for her.

How it works

1. In the moment, do nothing differently. Truly. Let the pattern run.
2. Later, whenever you remember (hours later counts; days later counts), come back to this page.
3. Write three lines: what happened right before, what your body felt like, what you did next.
4. No analyzing, no fixing, no grading yourself. Three lines, then close the page.

One honest example, so you know how unglamorous this is allowed to be: “Right before: a short reply to my long text. Body: hot face, tight chest. Next: I reread our messages for an hour.” That is a perfect entry. Nothing profound. Just seen.

• NOTE 1

What happened right before.

What my body felt like.

What I did next.

- NOTE 2

What happened right before.

What my body felt like.

What I did next.

- NOTE 3

What happened right before.

What my body felt like.

What I did next.

- NOTE 4

What happened right before.

What my body felt like.

What I did next.

- NOTE 5

What happened right before.

What my body felt like.

What I did next.

- AT THE END OF THE WEEK (optional)

Reading your notes back: what shows up more than once?

If you noticed even one pattern this week, even days late: that counted. That was the first rep. See you Sunday. Carrie

This worksheet is trauma recovery education, not therapy, diagnosis, or medical treatment, and it is not a substitute for care from a licensed professional. If you are in crisis, reach out now: in the U.S., call or text 988 (Suicide & Crisis Lifeline) or text HOME to 741741 (Crisis Text Line). If you are in immediate danger, call 911.

© 2026 Conscious Coaching Collective, PLLC · carriepdavidson.com · Get the Sunday Letter free at carriepdavidson.com/subscribe