THE WORKBOOK · A 6-WEEK CONSCIOUS CREATION JOURNEY

This book belongs to _____

Before We Begin

A private room, not a test.

This workbook is our companion for the next six weeks. It is not a test, not a tracker of perfection, and not one more place to perform. It is a private room where the truth gets to be told: where we are, what we carry, and what we want.

How we use it: each week, we do the signature practice once, we keep the short daily anchor each morning, and we visit the journal prompts whenever ten quiet minutes appear. Messy handwriting, skipped days, tears on the page: all welcome. The only rule is kindness toward the woman writing.

And this workbook is built for real brains, including the busy, brilliant, easily-elsewhere kind. Every piece is small, timed, and clearly marked. Each week opens with an at-a-glance list, one thing that matters most, and a shortest honest version for the days when everything is too much. We start anywhere. Done messy counts. Nothing here is homework; all of it is a door.

You don't attract the life you want. You grow the capacity to receive it, and then you act like the woman who already lives there.

Why did I say yes to this? What do I hope is different in six weeks?

THE MAP (CHECK EACH WEEK OFF AS WE GO)

- ☐ Week 1 · Ground: we come home to the body
- ☐ Week 2 · Clear: we find the old map and begin the rewrite
- ☐ Week 3 · Vision: we say what we want, at full size
- ☐ Week 4 · Embody: we become her now, in small daily ways
- ☐ Week 5 · Act: three brave moves, and the art of receiving

☐ Week 6 · Trust: we design the rhythm we get to keep

Ground

This week we come home to the body. Nothing to achieve, only somewhere to arrive.

THIS WEEK AT A GLANCE

- ☐ The Coming Home practice, once, in a quiet moment (15 min)
- ☐ The daily anchor, each morning (10 min)
- ☐ Journal prompts, any of them, whenever (10 min each)

If we only do one thing this week: name the state, once a day. That is the whole skill.

Shortest honest version for a hard day: three low breaths, name the state, done. Two minutes. It counts.

THE COMING HOME PRACTICE: NOTES

After the first full 15-minute practice: what did I notice in my body? What was hard? What surprised me?

THE SCIENCE, BRIEFLY

Naming works. In brain-imaging research at UCLA, simply putting a feeling into words (“affect labeling”) reduced activity in the amygdala, the brain’s alarm center (Lieberman and colleagues, 2007). This is why “name your state” is the whole practice this week: the naming itself is regulation.

GETTING TO KNOW MY THREE STATES

Settled feels like (in my body)...

Revved feels like...

Shut down feels like...

Which state do I spend most of my days in? What tends to send me there?

JOURNAL PROMPTS

1. When in my life have I felt most safe and most myself? What was present then?

2. What does my body do when I start to hope for something? What might that be telling me?

3. Where does my attention live on an ordinary day? Whose voice directs it?

4. If I trusted that slowing down wouldn't cost me anything, what would I do differently this week?

5. Complete: "Today, I will point my attention toward..."

AFFIRMATION OF THE WEEK

Right now, in this moment, I am safe enough to begin.

My body-tested version (we adjust the words until they land true):

END-OF-WEEK REFLECTION

What shifted in me this week, even slightly?

Where did I meet resistance, and what might it have been protecting?

What am I proud of?

What do I want to carry into next week?

Clear

This week we find the old map, thank it for its service, and begin the rewrite. We ground before every exercise here.

THIS WEEK AT A GLANCE

- ☐ The Belief Excavation, once, grounded first (30 to 40 min; tears allowed)
- ☐ Daily anchor + bridge beliefs aloud, each morning (12 min)
- ☐ Daily evidence hunt: one line a day (2 min)

If we only do one thing this week: catch one old belief operating in real time and say “there it is.”

Shortest honest version: read the three bridge beliefs aloud, hand on heart. One minute.

THE SCIENCE, BRIEFLY

A belief really is a practiced thought. In a University College London study, new behaviors took an average of 66 days of repetition to become automatic (Lally and colleagues, 2010), and missing a day here and there made no measurable difference. What practice installed, practice can revise. Not overnight, and not by force. By repetition, with kindness.

THE BELIEF EXCAVATION

We finish these stems fast, without editing. The first answers are the honest ones.

Money is...

Love is...

People like me...

If I really went for it...

I'm the kind of person who...

MY BIG THREE

We circle the three sentences with the strongest body response: a sink, a clench, a flush. Then we sit with each one, gently. We hunt beliefs here, never blame.

Belief 1. The old belief / where I first learned it / whose voice it sounds like:

What it was protecting me from:

My bridge belief (one believable step forward; the chest stays open):

Belief 2. The old belief / where I first learned it / whose voice it sounds like:

What it was protecting me from:

My bridge belief:

Belief 3. The old belief / where I first learned it / whose voice it sounds like:

What it was protecting me from:

My bridge belief:

JOURNAL PROMPTS

1. A letter of thanks to my old map: “Thank you for getting me this far...”

2. What would I want, do, or say this year if my Big Three weren’t true?

3. Who in my life already lives as if my bridge beliefs are true? What do I notice about them?

4. What evidence from my own past contradicts my oldest belief?

5. What am I ready to stop rehearsing?

DAILY EVIDENCE HUNT

Each day, one small piece of evidence that supports any bridge belief. This is how we train the filter.

AFFIRMATION OF THE WEEK

I can thank the old story and still choose a new one.

END-OF-WEEK REFLECTION

What shifted in me this week, even slightly?

Where did I meet resistance, and what might it have been protecting?

What am I proud of?

What do I want to carry into next week?

Vision

Permission to want, at full size, before the editing department gets hold of it.

THIS WEEK AT A GLANCE

- ☐ Values inventory (15 min)
- ☐ The Tuesday letter, timer on, no editing (20 min)
- ☐ Vision statement, distilled from the letter (10 min)
- ☐ Daily anchor now includes the vision, read aloud (15 min)

If we only do one thing this week: the Tuesday letter. Twenty minutes, one timer, full size.

Shortest honest version: read the vision statement aloud and stay two minutes inside one scene of it.

THE SCIENCE, BRIEFLY

Writing the vision is not wishful thinking. In psychologist Laura King’s research, people who spent a few days writing about their “best possible self” showed measurable increases in well-being compared to controls (King, 2001), and later studies have repeated the finding. The Tuesday letter is that exercise, made sensory and specific.

VALUES INVENTORY

Ten moments I felt most alive (short phrases are fine):

The threads I see (what was present in most of them):

My 3 to 5 felt-values (single words):

WEEK 3 · VISION

THE TUESDAY LETTER

Twenty minutes, present tense, an ordinary Tuesday eighteen months from now. Sensory. Specific enough to film. No realism police allowed in this room.

MY VISION STATEMENT

We distill the essence into five to seven present-tense sentences. This paragraph joins the daily anchor for the rest of the journey.

JOURNAL PROMPTS

1. What have I always wanted but stopped saying out loud? When did I stop?

2. Whose dream have I been carrying that isn't mine? Am I ready to set it down?

3. Which line of my Tuesday letter produced the strongest lift-ache feeling? Why that one?

4. What would I need to believe about myself for this vision to feel inevitable?

5. What is one desire I'm still pre-shrinking? What is its full size?

AFFIRMATION OF THE WEEK

What I want is allowed to want me back.

END-OF-WEEK REFLECTION

What shifted in me this week, even slightly?

Where did I meet resistance, and what might it have been protecting?

What am I proud of?

What do I want to carry into next week?

Embodiment

We close the gap now, not after the results arrive. Identity leads. Circumstances follow.

THIS WEEK AT A GLANCE

- ☐ Identity inventory, answered as her (15 min)
- ☐ Find the three gaps, design three daily acts (15 min)
- ☐ Two environment edits, made once, working all week (10 min)
- ☐ The three acts, daily (under 10 min each)

If we only do one thing this week: one identity act, today, in the life we already have.

Shortest honest version: two minutes inside her feeling-state. Rehearsal counts.

THE SCIENCE, BRIEFLY

Rehearsal is real. In a well-known study at Harvard, people who only imagined practicing a five-finger piano exercise showed changes in the brain's motor map similar to those who physically practiced (Pascual-Leone and colleagues, 1995). And environment matters more than willpower: researchers estimate that roughly 40 percent of what we do each day is habit, performed in the same context, cue first, decision never (Wood and colleagues, 2002).

IDENTITY INVENTORY

We answer as her, in present tense.

How does she start her morning?

How does she speak to herself when she makes a mistake?

What does she no longer explain or apologize for?

How does she rest?

How does she decide?

What does she wear when she wants to feel like herself?

WEEK 4 · EMBODY

THE THREE GAPS

The three differences between her defaults and mine that feel most alive:

MY THREE DAILY IDENTITY ACTS

Act 1 (under 10 minutes, doable today):

Act 2:

Act 3:

ENVIRONMENT EDITS

Two changes I made to my space this week to make her the path of least resistance:

JOURNAL PROMPTS

1. Where am I still waiting for permission? Who do I imagine holds it?

2. What part of my current identity is actually a survival strategy I've outgrown?

3. When I generated her feeling-state this morning, what changed in how I moved through the day?

4. What is one thing she would say no to that I said yes to this week?

5. Would I do my identity acts if no one could ever see? Which one is secretly a performance?

IDENTITY ACTS TRACKER

If we miss a day: missing a day is data, not failure. The repair, beginning again without self-punishment, is the new identity.

AFFIRMATION OF THE WEEK

I am becoming her by being her today.

END-OF-WEEK REFLECTION

What shifted in me this week, even slightly?

Where did I meet resistance, and what might it have been protecting?

What am I proud of?

What do I want to carry into next week?

Act

Aligned action: clear, a little scary, and clean. Three brave moves. The world responds to women in motion.

THIS WEEK AT A GLANCE

- ☐ Choose and schedule three brave moves, early in the week (15 min)
- ☐ Execute each move, then log it (the move is the practice)
- ☐ One receiving rep, daily: a breath and a thank-you (1 min)

If we only do one thing this week: put Move 1 in the calendar, right now, before this page is turned.

Shortest honest version: one receiving rep. Take the compliment. Breathe. Done.

CANDIDATE MOVES

“What three moves would she make this week?” We list candidates without censoring:

THE SCIENCE, BRIEFLY

Scheduling is not busywork; it is the single best-documented follow-through tool in psychology. Deciding in advance exactly when and where an action happens (an “implementation intention”) substantially raises the odds it actually happens, across a meta-analysis of 94 studies (Gollwitzer and Sheeran, 2006). A move without a time slot really is a wish.

MY THREE BRAVE MOVES

Each move gets a day and an hour.

Move 1 / scheduled for:

Move 2 / scheduled for:

Move 3 / scheduled for:

MOVE LOG

Move 1: what I did / what state I did it from / what happened / what door it opened:

Move 2:

Move 3:

DOORS NOTICED THIS WEEK

Conversations, mentions, introductions, openings. We log them even when we don't walk through.

RECEIVING REPS

Once a day, we receive something fully: a breath, a thank-you, no deflection. What was it, and what did the body do?

Day	What I received	What my body did
MON
TUE
THU
SAT
SUN

JOURNAL PROMPTS

1. What is the difference, in my body, between hustle and aligned action?

2. What did moving change in me, regardless of the outcome?

3. What did I deflect this week that I could have received?

4. Which door surprised me most? What might be on the other side?

5. What would the 10% braver version of me do next week?

AFFIRMATION OF THE WEEK

I move, and the path moves with me.

END-OF-WEEK REFLECTION

What shifted in me this week, even slightly?

Where did I meet resistance, and what might it have been protecting?

What am I proud of?

What do I want to carry into next week?

Trust

One hand doing the next true thing, one hand open. This week we design the rhythm we get to keep.

THIS WEEK AT A GLANCE

- ☐ Reread the Week 3 Tuesday letter, notice the differences (10 min)
- ☐ The Trust Letter, from her to us (20 min)
- ☐ Design the rhythm: daily, weekly, quarterly (10 min)
- ☐ The wobble plan, written while steady (10 min)

If we only do one thing this week: the Trust Letter. It is the one we will reread for years.

Shortest honest version: the minimum viable anchor. Five minutes. Never zero.

THE SCIENCE, BRIEFLY

The wobble has a science too. In relapse research, what best predicts a full slide back is not the lapse itself but how it gets interpreted: treating one stumble as proof of total failure is what turns a lapse into a relapse (Marlatt and Gordon's relapse-prevention work). And people higher in self-compassion recover from setbacks faster and ruminate less (Neff's research program). The kind repair is not soft. It is the evidence-based move.

LOOKING BACK TO LOOK FORWARD

Re-reading my Week 3 Tuesday letter: every way I am already different from the woman who wrote it...

My honest scorecard of the six weeks: inner shifts (state, self-talk, courage) and outer evidence...

WEEK 6 · TRUST

THE TRUST LETTER

From the woman in the vision, dated eighteen months from now, to the woman holding this pen. She gets to say what mattered, what to keep doing, what to stop worrying about, and what she is grateful we didn't give up on. We open it when the wobble gets loud.

WEEK 6 · TRUST

MY RHYTHM FOR LIFE

My daily anchor (elements, time, place):

My weekly check-in (which day, what I'll review):

My quarterly vision date (the first one is in the calendar for...):

My minimum viable anchor for hard days (never zero):

THE WOBBLE PLAN

My early warning signs that the old wiring is firing:

My repair sequence when I notice (specific and kind):

JOURNAL PROMPTS

1. What seed have I planted that I keep digging up to check on? What would leaving it in the ground look like?

2. “Have I done my part for today?” What is my part, honestly, and what is just monitoring?

3. What did these six weeks turn out to actually be about for me?

4. The next thing I am ready to create is...

5. The support I will enlist for it is...

AFFIRMATION OF THE WEEK

It is already on its way, and so am I.

END-OF-WEEK REFLECTION

What shifted in me these six weeks, even slightly?

What am I proud of?

*This is not the end of the practice,
only the end of the beginning.*

I'm so proud of you.
